1. I legitimately laughed. There was also a /r/crowjerk created, which I particularly enjoyed.
2. Mainly the submission stuff, I suppose? Trying to get stuff out of the new queue to get some attention is a pain at times, as for comments, mainly my own hot-headedness against misinformation? It doesn't make it right, but that's the - reasoning, at least.

3. I legitimately just tried to post this under the other account, but maybe I was logged in under my usual and it's been unbanned? Not sure, I'll wait to hear from the admins.
 4. Done and done!
 5. I don't see why not! If the admins feel like they want to give me a second chance, I'll go back to it, but it's just numbers on the other account. The real thing that I enjoy is talking with people, teaching and having fun on the site, and I can do that regardless of username.

 7. C'mon, man, it's not like there's a gigantic, bold, fire-engine red sign that says "DON'T PUT THE PUNCHLINE IN THE FREAKING TITLE" directly above where you put the title, right? Cut the guy some slack.
 8. Generally, but I was already doxxed well before the talk, which is why I was less hesitant about doing it.
 9. TEDx talk doesn't pay anything, it's voluntary if they ask you to do one, though I got wine and dine, which was nice. The funding we raised for the crow project was about 6k.
 10. I use all of those except ooVoo, which I've never heard of until now, haha.
 11. I'm a fan of flying foxes and pangolins, I suppose?
 12. Well, silverfish break things down, too, so we're about even. :D
 13. By asking this, I feel like you're still going to fall short.
 14. Counter-question: what do humans contribute to the world?
 15. Haha, I'd rather not link it here and essentially doxx myself, but it's one of the top searches on YouTube, it's not hard to find. I'll send you a PM.

 17. I had a comment about a sandwich that I made, haha, it's very bizarre. Also, yup, a TEDx talk, though, not a full TED.
 18. Thanks, always appreciate the kind words! :)
 19. Nope, though a Reddit comment of mine is being adapted into a short movie! I have been in a music video though. I'm making out with someone in the crowd, but it's pretty hard to see, unfortunately/fortunately.
